So What Makes Finland good at Education?

One of the reasons this team of educational leaders visited Finland was because Finland dominated the PISA scores (International scores for Reading, Science and Math/out of 70 countries) for 12 years running, often coming in 1st or 2nd. That consistency quickly caused the rest of the world to stand up and take notice.

What we learned is that this little country of 6 million people does a very, very good job 'supporting' their educational system.

Teachers and Professional Development

It starts with teachers in Finland. Having over 10,000 applicants for under 50 teaching positions is not uncommon. Teachers are extremely well trained and well educated and it is such a high and respected calling in Finland that the schools can pick from the best of the very best. One thing I noticed is that all of the 15 or so teachers I observed in the schools were very, very good at classroom management. Better management of students allows for more space to learn resulting in deeper learning. This was clear in all the schools we visited. Teachers managed students well, consistently and carved out those boundaries of learning with joy and a smile, not with an edge.

A deep sense of professional development was also very clearly a part of the teaching culture. Teachers took professional development as a very serious part of being a teacher, were given lots of opportunity to grow (and expected to grow) and reflected deeply and often on best practices.

Healthy Bodies equal Sharper Minds

Built right into the educational law in Finland is an expectation that little bodies need to be active to learn best. There is an expectation that there will be recess times or physical education times strategically placed in and around instructional times to allow for better learning.

The above concepts are just a few of the areas that were noted on this professional development trip by the leaders that attended. I had the blessing of presenting a much longer list to our board members at our October board meeting last week and plan to share that same list of areas gleaned with the TCS staff later this month. I also plan to share highlights at the membership meeting in November.

A natural part of learning from other schools is comparing those highlights with TCS. Strong classroom management and a deep sense of Professional development are strong themes at TCS as well. The professional reading that TCS staff is discussing at our meetings throughout this year is 'Leaders of Their Own Learning" by Ron Berger. This book challenges teachers to further help students engage in deeper learning and the assessment that supports that.

News from Development

A letter addressing Membership will be mailed out this week. If you're unsure whether you have made your payment to become a TCS Member or not, feel free to call the school to ask. This new Membership policy & process has been adjusted to $10 per person. This permits voting rights during our Society meetings, ability to Chair a committee, ability to apply for a Board position as well as gaining access to certain important school information & policies. We pray you will consider becoming a Member and walking with us as we lead this school into a great future!

Message from the Board at resource Thrift Shop

After much prayer and deliberation, we have decided to hire a part-time position at the shop. The primary purpose of this hire is to help stream actituity at the shop, providing consistent management and continuity within the store.

To be clear, it does not take away the importance of having volunteers working at the store. We still require at minimum 4 people covering daily shifts in order to run effectively.

We understand completely the busyness of life, more can be challenging. Working together as a community we can share the responsibility. When TCS families can commit to 4 hours each month (through sort nights, day shifts and Saturdays, work from home projects) the shop benefits and so does TCS.

We look forward to continuing to work together supporting Christian education.

Shift Coverage Requirements this week

Thursday: 11am—3pm; 3pm—6pm

Friday: 1:30pm—5:30pm Saturday: 2pm—5pm

Regular Sort Nights Coming Up

Thurs. Oct. 26: 5pm—8pm Mon. Nov. 13:6pm—9pm
